

TITLE: Critical language awareness in multilingual educational contexts

Andrea Young works at the Faculty of Education and Lifelong Learning (INSPÉ) at the University of Strasbourg where she is a Full Professor of English and member of the Language\(s\) and Society unit of the LiLPa (Linguistique, Langues, Parole, UR1339) research group. Her research and teaching interests include teacher education for the support of plurilingual learners, home/school educational partnerships, teacher language awareness and plurilingual and intercultural education. Andrea regularly participates in European projects related to her research interests and is currently a member of the ACTIN (ACT and connect for INtegration: language learning and cultural awareness) European project consortium, working to strengthen ties between universities, NGOs and schools. She is also co-vice-president of the EDiLiC (Education et Diversité Linguistique et Culturelle) international association which strives to promote innovative pedagogical approaches to raising Language Awareness in educational settings.

ABSTRACT:

In this talk I will briefly present some of the salient issues concerning language education in multilingual contexts in Alsace, France, in which I have been teaching and researching for over 2 decades. Many of the challenges my colleagues and I face are similar to those encountered in other contexts and with which you may also be familiar: teachers/educators feeling ill-prepared to deal with children in their classrooms who can not yet function through the language(s) of education, multiple languages spoken by the children and their families which the teacher/educator does not speak etc. However, due to contextual differences linked to historical, political and ideological variables, some of the affordances and constraints experienced in the Alsatian setting may differ from those encountered in Norway.

Focusing on the notion of critical language awareness which acknowledges the power element embedded in language practices and attitudes, I will firstly examine why criticality should be viewed as an essential component for the language aware professional. Secondly, I will share data from several studies, from pre-school to post-graduate settings, illustrating how critical language awareness can manifest itself in the classroom and how it may be nurtured in teacher education.
